

Evaluative Reorientation of Ideologies (?)

to be of an initial, conscious notion, to feel, if even vaguely, some inadequacy in that notion, and to evaluatively overhaul that notion, either partially or wholly, into another. This necessitates, or at least is expedited by, a deconstructed 'hypostasis' of the initial notion. I shall attempt to engage in an example.

The initial notion: something of a traditional, perhaps outdated one. The notion that one's value is exhibited/manifest in their effect on their world - their domain, their presence, their influence, etc. Perhaps the firmness of the grip this ideology has on its subjects is correlated to the degree to which it is popularly reinforced, intersubjectively sustained.

"I need to make my position in the crowd known, and I need that position to be sufficiently respectable"?

"I need to establish ~~that~~ my conditions, and establish their sternness to a sufficient degree"?